

None Shines Brighter

In American deeds of valor none shines brighter than the 106th Division's stand in the Battle of the Bulge of World War II.

Just as the men at the Alamo and in the Philippines knew they must fight on against hopeless odds, the 106th recognized that it must take the brunt of the German attack while the Allies regrouped. In its epoch of self-sacrifice, the division suffered casualties of more than 50%, but as all the world knows, their ordeal was a life-saving one for many other Allied troops penned in the bulge.

Indianapolis is honored again to be host to 500 veterans of the 106th — reunited to further its high purpose of "promoting fellowship, supporting the families of its men killed in the war and perpetuating the memory of those who 'shall not have died in vain'."
